January 15:
 Cougars Vs. VAN

Prince George, B.C.- The Steelworkers Union will have exploratory talks with Canfor today in an effort to hammer out a new contract for their membership.

The Steelworkers represent about 9,000 forestry workers in the province, who have been without a contract since the last one expired at the end of June.

Today's session with Canfor is the second round of exploratory discussions with this company, and a similar session is set to take place with West Fraser on the 25th.

Initially, the contract discussions had been with Conifer but those talks broke down in mid October.

Any contract reached with one company will be the template for others.
