

Print This Article | Close this window

Labour deal reached for Canadian forestry firms

---

Tue Aug 17, 2010 5:44pm EDT

VANCOUVER (Reuters) - A tentative labour agreement has been reached between forestry companies and about 2,000 workers in northern British Columbia who have been without a contract for over a year, the union said on Tuesday.

Details of the four-year deal were not released, but it includes wage increases in the last two years, job security measures and the possibility of profit-sharing if lumber markets improve, the United Steelworkers said.

The union reached the agreement with Conifer, which is the bargaining agent for several forestry companies with mills in northern British Columbia, including Tolko Industries, AbitibiBowater Inc, Conifex Timber Inc. and West Fraser Timber Co.

The industry's previous contract expired at the end of June 2009, but the workers remained on the job. The new agreement appears similar to a deal the union reached in February with Canfor Corp.

Forestry contracts in British Columbia are negotiated largely on a regional basis. Talks continue between the union and employers in central and southern British Columbia, as well as those in the coastal region.

(Reporting Allan Dowd; editing by Rob Wilson)

© Thomson Reuters 2010. All rights reserved. Users may download and print extracts of content from this website for their own personal and non-commercial use only. Reproduction or redistribution of Thomson Reuters content, including by framing or similar means, is expressly prohibited without the prior written consent of Thomson Reuters. Thomson Reuters and its logo are registered trademarks or trademarks of the Thomson Reuters group of companies around the world.

---

Thomson Reuters journalists are subject to the Editorial Handbook which requires fair presentation and disclosure of relevant interests.